In the age of perpetual self-victimhood as the new meekness, it is the best interest of people with half a screw lose to cash in on the pity party. Such is the case with AOC, the congresswoman who has made a name for herself being a twitter progressive, while going along with the Pelosi-neoliberals in the Democratic party. This time, it is regarding the Capitol Hill Riot that took place last week. Several congresspersons described the fear they had while hiding under their desk, for fear of encountering normal working-class White people. As a person of color, AOC no doubt saw this insurrection as Literally Hitler™. Regardless, she revealed that she is the survivor of sexual assault, or so she claims.

> "These folks who tell us to move on, that it's not a big deal, that we should forget what's happened, or even telling us to apologize. These are the same tactics of abusers. And I'm a survivor of sexual assault," she said.
> My story isn't the only story, nor is it the central story of what happened on Jan 6th.It is just one story of many of those whose lives were endangered at the Capitol by the lies, threats, and violence fanned by the cowardice of people who chose personal gain above democracy.

The folks she is referring to are her Republican colleagues in both chambers. Now she didn't expound of the details of her alleged assault, nor has any proof been provided. It is just simply to be taken on faith: believe all delusions, cry the non-white handmaids at the gate! What is always so revealing about those who claim to have been sexual assault victims of one sort or another, is that the absence of evidence is taken as the very proof for their victimhood. For if you except that their claims be proved, you must be just like an abuser; however, if you simply accept their claims, the argument is circular.

> Good to know that any loopy delusion expounded by a politician must now be respected and “believed” under the aegis of “trauma”.

AOC was not traumatized and is not a victim of anything. As the left and their non-white allies cry out in oppressive screams, they beat you down under the guise of democracy. AOC doesn’t really believe in democracy, nor in anything really. She is simply the logical result of worshiping for hundreds of years at the altar of human rights, where everything is equal, and where everyone gets to steal White people’s stuff.
